IDNow is an Australian designed, fully customisable, stand alone identification software system which is a user friendly, great value software package which offers multiple and unlimited database facilities. Technical support and upgrades are available.

With its easy to use WYSIWYG card designer IDNow makes designing card layouts a simple task. Photographs, signatures and/or fingerprints may be stored in the IDNow database or individually on any local or network hard disk drive. If stored separately any IDNow field may be used to link the images.

Photographs may be used from a range of different sources some of which are digital video cameras via USB or firewire. Digital still cameras via twain interface, some analogue video cameras via a capture card, web cameras or photos stored on disk or hard drive.

Full import of all database fields, data source may be tab or comma delimited text file or Access database. Photographs, signatures, fingerprint images and templates may be imported from an Access database also. Card layouts may automatically be assigned based on the data being imported.

Support is available for Windows 2000 and XP. Official support for Windows NT4, 95, 98, and ME is no longer available although IDNow may run if your system has all of the latest updates from Microsoft.

Works with any model card, label or paper printer that has a Windows driver. Full support for double sided printing if your card printer supports it as well as hopper selection.

Free updates for registered users for the life of the software (site licences may have an annual support charge). Quick turnaround on bug fixes and requested enhancements. Usually within 24 hours.
